This has been a fun project. I'm proud of the way it looks. I feel I was able to keep some of the same feeling as the old site, but with a modern look. I would liked to have added a feature for pictures in the product section to pop out when clicked. I would have also liked to really add in true support for mobile browsers. That is still something I'm learning how to do but ran out of time between the 50+ hour work weeks and school work this summer.

Some of my formatting wasn't correct on small screens. After I adjusted the formatting, the site looks much better on small screens. I tried to keep the layout simple and easy to navigate without too much information. This was based off of who would be looking at the site. It was hard to make some of the design decisions as there wasn't much on the original site to work with, so anything I did would be different. I used bootstrap to help with the layout and some of the styling.

The biggest problem I encountered was the fact C.B. Davis is shutting down. I found this out after I had already started on the site. Mike was fine that I continued working on it, but has been busy with that ordeal that it was hard to get information that they would have wanted on their site if they weren't shutting down.
